WM. W. RICHARDSON, LONG A NEWSPAPER MAN HERE, IS DEAD

Served As City Editor of The Times, and on Other Newspapers.

After an illness extending over a period of nearly six months, William W. Richardson, at one time news editor of The Times, and one of the best known of the "old guard" journalists of Washington, died at his home at Drummond, Md., this morning. Circhosis of the liver was the immediate cause of death. Funeral arrangements ause of death. Funeral arrangements have not yet been made. Mr. Richardson had been confined to his home since July. About two months ago he was operated on.

and began life as a bank clerk, but entered the newspaper profession as a reporter on the Atlanta Constitution under the late Henry W. Grady. He came to Washington in 1885 and served for a time as a reporter on the Post, later soing to The Times, where he was city cditer for some time. He then entered the employ of the Star, and was actively its news editor until he was obliged to relinquish his duties in July.

In 1899 Mr. Richardson marries Miss Lulu Clabaugh of Washington, who, with one son, Wightman, aved eleven, and one sister, living in Georgia, and a nephew, Simson W. Richardson, survives him. Mr. Richardson's mother and father are both dead, as are his two brothers, Henry and Edward, the former having been a prominent newspaper writer of the South.

Horubu. In this house Renwick is blinded by a mysterious radium-sponge manipulated by Horubu. Trarka tells him his one hope of recovering his sight is a Beatrice Responser, but the 80 guiness she asks for her treatment is more than Renwick can pay. Tarka inapire her heavy demands to further a plot of his ewn.

After he has despaired of regaining sight, Renwick is visited by Peplo Turka, who insists upon advancing the necessary amount. The detective cured returns to work. He is immediately detailed to work to immediately detailed to work on a mysterious outregs. Six prominent and wealthy people, while attending a picture exhibit at the studie of Sets Incapiti, a Japakese and a friend of the Tourhan have been terribly injured by a shower of radium mys.

Among those badly injured is Mise Viele Cranations, a charming young actrees, with whom inouyiti is in love. Renwick finds in the course of his investigation as artificial finger cunningly centified in which is bedden the radium which had been stolen. Dr. Turka, overwhelmed by the lose of this substaince, which is essential to his plot, decides upon a desperate plan to recover it, namely, to assasinate Renwick from a motorcar, Inouyiti to essentit the feed, while Beardus drives then straight into his own fearless eyes.

"Why do you honor me with a visit, Mr. Renwick?" she asked simply. "People who have been blind rarely come back to my little theater."

There was no mistaking the undercurrent of bain in her words. And Gifford remembered the day he had staggered into her operating chair, when the fingers of the radium devils were striving to unseat his reason. He could not, however, subdue the overpowering impulse which had driven him to his self-allotted task. "Mme. "Yes, of Dr. Tsarka." She passed slowly to the window overlook the street, and the young detective saw a tear fiash on the half-turned cheek.
"Now that we understand," he continued quietly. "I want to beg a favor of you in regard to Miss Violet Cranstone, You are aware, perhaps, that she is the fifth victim in the studio affair?" "She came early this morning." Beatrice spoke with her face to the window and the effort seemed to shake her. "She came this morning, and I was compelled to demand a certain fee. You will understand, Mr. Renwick, how sorry I am that anyone should be refused treatment here?"
Gifford bowed slightly. "Miss Cranstone will call at 12:30, Have I your assurance, Mme. Messonier, that she will receive the same treatment which you accorded me?"
"I cannot promise until I have an opportunity of consulting my parts."
